

A FIGHT IN VIRGINIA.

Attack upon a Train at Catlett's Station by Moseby's Guerrillas.

Subsequent Defeat of the Rebels with Heavy Loss.

CAPTURE OF THEIR ARTILLERY.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 31.

A telegram was received this afternoon from Gen. STAHL, dated at Fairfax Court-House to-day, in which he says MOSEBY, with 200 men and one howitzer, attacked our train of cars near Catlett's Station yesterday, and the guard having escaped he burned the train. The locomotive is not much damaged. Col. MASON, of the Seventh Michigan, who had the command in the front, hearing the firing, took a portion of his followers and followed in search of the rebels. He encountered them two miles from Greenwich, where they had taken a very strong position. Col. MANN charged the rebels, who replied with grape and canister. But (as the Colonel reports) our men never faltered. They dashed upon the rebels and took their guns. Col. MANN returned at dark to his camp in front, bringing up the captured artillery and all our dead and wounded—four of the former and fifteen of the latter. It was an extremely hot fight. We have (the dispatch says) many prisoners, including Capt. HASKINS, an English officer in the Confederate service, and Lieut. CHAPMAN, who had charge of the artillery. Both of these officers were so severely wounded that they could not be removed, and were paroled. The enemy lost very heavily in killed and wounded. After the enemy were thoroughly dispersed in every direction through the woods, darkness set in and precluded further pursuit. Lieut. BARKER, of our forces, was struck by a grape shot in the thigh. He crossed sabres with the enemy, and fought desperately after he was wounded.

The New York Times

Published: June 1, 1863

Copyright © The New York Times